

In 1954 Carlo Mollino presented an "ideal house" for the 10th Triennale in Milano. It was a mountain house called Casa Capriata. The project "of a house with a timber structure" had been in the works since 1946 but sadly it never saw conclusion. With some dedication by the local Turin government, the new "Carlo Mollino" shelter opened in 2014.

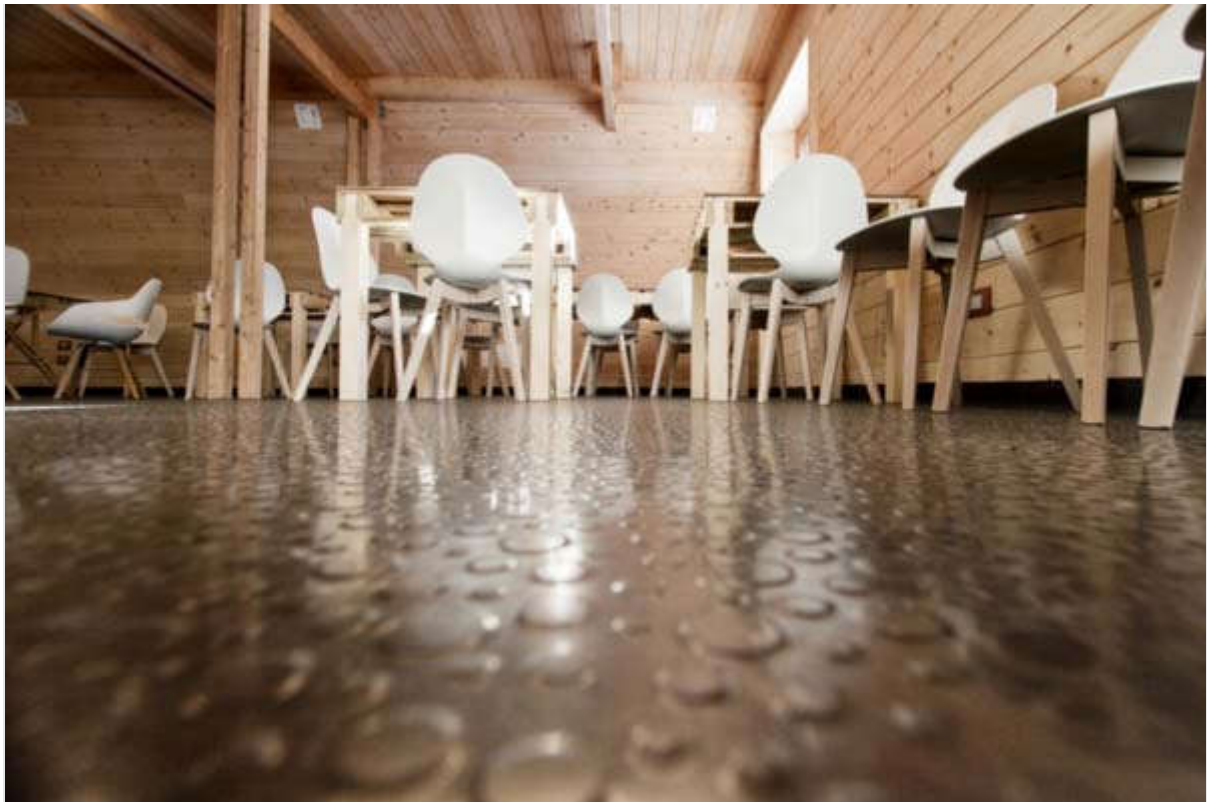

The timber house is beautifully finished with an Italian rubber floor by Artigo.

Mollino himself foresaw the use of (for the times) state-of-the-art materials to provide effective thermal isolation and comfort. Following in these footsteps, today Casa Capriata is a low-emission building.

A rubber flooring was envisioned by Mollino himself in his original project: the choice made at the time was the now-classic "round studded" BS design. Inspired by the values of innovation and pushing-the-boundaries that define the whole project, we were able to provide the building team with a "modern take" on the round stud: our own exclusive Zero4 flooring. Unanimously adopted, Zero4 has become a defining feature of the building. Its dynamic, "spatially-aware" surface creates a strong, bold match with the natural wood of the walls and the ceiling, in what can be seen as an ideal meeting, across time, of two great architects.

You don't need to have a lodge in the mountains of Turin to get a high quality, innovative flooring solution. As the exclusive nationwide distributor for Italy's Artigo flooring products, Spectrum Floors can provide a world class floor for your next project.
