PROJECTS LATE NOVEMBER 2016

Se trata de un corazón dorado. "It's a golden heart": with such words GAZ Arquitectos (Aitor Gurtubay, Asier Atxurra and Unai Zelaieta) speak of their project Musikene, the Higher School of Music of the Basque Country.

It's an architecture of striking contrast, with the black aluminum-clad façade and the golden inner surfaces, "the cuts" as the designers call them: "three large incisions carved into the compact volume with clean and straight cuts, acting as acoustic screens and showing the inner brightness of the building to the city".

The black-gold association is also a nod to the finish of many musical instruments, making the building almost speak for itself as per its function.

As part of the building team, we provided 8000 sqm of our exclusive Kayar rubber flooring (in black of course) designed for us by Sottsass Associati. Kayar's main feature is the presence of natural coconut fibers, randomly distributed in the surface. A natural element that breathes life in every setting.

The golden heart previously mentioned is the Auditorium, the vital core of the building, with a capacity of 420 people and a stage as large as the seating area, capable of hosting a 100-pieces orchestra. Shrouded and protected in the architectural volume, it is meant to “project into the city through the crystalline patios, as large golden speakers that turn the Higher School of Music of the Basque Country in a recognizable landmark”.
